SUMMARY OF OCCUPATION

Deckhands carry out a range of basic duties essential to the running and maintenance of a boat or ship. The exact duties of a deckhand can vary depending on the type of vessel they work on. Those working on sailing ships may have to climb tall masts and work in the ship's rigging, while those working on a charter boat or ferry may spend more time taking care of passengers, sometimes serving drinks and food. Regardless of the vessel, all deckhands assist in keeping the vessel clean and seaworthy, keeping lookout, steering and adjusting the course as directed and dealing with any emergencies that occur.

WORKING CONDITIONS

Many deckhands only spend short periods of time at sea; however, with experience and greater training they may spend weeks or months at a time away from land. They work as part of a team and must follow safe work practices to minimize the risk of danger to themselves, other crew members and passengers. They often work outdoors, in a range of weather conditions, though even when working indoors they may be exposed to rough weather conditions, which can be unpleasant. Hours of work can vary greatly depending on the type of vessel and the season. Some deckhands may work shifts, which can include nights and weekends.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

To become a deckhand, you must obtain a Certificate of Competency from the Australian Maritime Safety Authority (AMSA). This involves completion of the AMSA approved qualification - Certificate I in Maritime Operations (General Purpose Hand Near Coastal). You can complete this qualification through Seafood and Maritime Industries Training (SMIT) which is a recognised training provider and AMSA approved assessor.

TOOLS AND TECHNOLOGY

Deckhands use ropes and knots for a variety of purposes, including berthing vessels and tying down cargo. They may also use navigational instruments and radio equipment, usually under the supervision of a senior crew member. Safety equipment is very important and can include fire-extinguishers, life jackets and inflatable life rafts. They may also use standard cleaning equipment and hand tools to carry out general maintenance duties.

However, it is expected that students will have appropriate language, literacy and numeracy skills to complete the training and assessment requirements.
